Dear Sir:

The University of Delaware herein announces its Fourth Symposium on Language Studies. Enclosed you will find a Call for Papers requesting abstracts from interested writers and researchers whose fields of interest converge upon the theme of this year's Symposium, Linguistics, Humanism and Information Management. The University invites participation from all areas of government and business as well as from the academic community.

Therefore, we request that you encourage members of your Division and others with which you are associated to take part in the dissemination of information about research conducted and advances made in the fields of language and computers by posting this Call for Papers. The previous deadline for the submission of abstracts, you will note, has been extended from March 1 to March 20, 1982.

Proceedings of the Fourth Delaware Symposium on Language Studies will be produced in book form by Ablex Publishers. This work, to be entitled Humans and Machines: the Interface Through Language, is scheduled for print release in 1984.

Thank you for your help.

Sincerely yours,

Stephanie Williams
